

The Swinging Door

Cartoons and local edition production

A presentation for Rick Swider

Barclay: "I pay for financial advice so my second-guessing has professional opposition."

Three familiar voices

Drew notices the absurdity in the system.

Barclay feels it in his wallet.

Abby has the last word.

The matching speaking pose keeps the mouth open and the listeners turned toward the speaker.

Abby: "I'll split the bill. You can divide the credit for predicting the market."

Austin, Texas

Taking Offers

Barclay:

“My Austin house finally got an offer.
From my realtor, to lower the price.”

Housing supplies the subject. The TV sets it up, the caption turns it, and the chalkboard adds a second joke.

Selected example from the gallery, not the result of a new live request.

Barclay: “My Austin house finally got an offer. From my realtor, to lower the price.”

Los Angeles, California

The View Is Extra

Drew:

“In L.A., I’m renting the view. The house costs extra.”

A different city and a different joke, with the same familiar room and cast.

Selected example from the gallery. New requests need their own local research and artwork.

Drew: “In L.A., I’m renting the view. The house costs extra.”

Everyday money

Individual Flakes

Drew:

“The cereal's the same price, but I'm beginning to recognize the individual flakes.”

A familiar purchase makes the setup immediate. The reader needs no financial jargon to enjoy the line.

Drew: “The cereal's the same price, but I'm beginning to recognize the individual flakes.”

Local life, a light touch

Quiet Arrivals

Drew:

“I'm against airport noise, except when it's bringing my grandchildren.”

The joke finds a recognizable contradiction without taking a political side.

The editorial review checks warmth, clarity and originality before publication.

A simple generation flow

01 Choose

Enter a city, a state and a cartoon count. Generate saves the request before production starts.

02 Research and write

Dated sources guide the subject. The writer and reviewer revise the caption and matching TV and chalkboard ideas.

03 Draw and assemble

The RTX 4090 creates TV art. The compositor preserves the room and matching cast, then adds chalk and dialogue.

04 Review

Progress reports completed stages, not a time estimate. Finished images appear with downloads and source records.

The system behind the screen

01 GitHub and Vercel

GitHub holds the code and selected art. Vercel serves the website and authenticated request endpoints.

02 Supabase

The database retains the queue and recovery checkpoints. Private storage holds generated images and evidence.

03 The local RTX 4090

Requests wait when the PC is offline or its GPU is busy. The latest approved cast still awaits activation in the scheduled worker.

04 The longer-term host

A dedicated always-on GPU can replace the PC. Monitoring and a tested recovery process remain essential.

Print size changes the detail

Artwork size	Effective PPI	Use
3.4 x 5.1 inches	301	Fine-detail proof
4 x 6 inches	256	Classic print
5 x 7.5 inches	205	Medium review
6 x 9 inches	171	Large review

The source is 1024 x 1536 pixels. Enlarging the picture does not create new detail.

The website exports exact-size PDFs on Letter or A4. Use Actual size in the print dialog and confirm the publication’s requirements.

An editor's view

Cartoons, slides and newspaper layouts

The Presentation tab browses all 40 cartoons in full-screen slides.

Choose up to 12 cartoons for a print packet. Compare four artwork sizes or switch on the 11 x 17 inch newspaper layout study.

Every generated edition still needs editorial review before publication.

Drew: "The listing calls it a 'rare opportunity'—there are twelve more on the same street."
