

TODAY'S PROGRESS / FOR RICK

Still perfecting the scene.

Today I concentrated on the bar setting: a stronger shelf design, cleaner marble edges, a revised window sill and clearer signage. The room is still being refined.

THE SETTING TONIGHT

A clearer direction for the room.

Rick, today's biggest step was choosing the open walnut shelf design and bringing it into the room. I also worked through the smaller details that make the setting feel believable.

WHAT IS TAKING SHAPE

Two substantial shelves, visible wall panelling and a simpler treatment below the rear ledge.

STILL IN PROGRESS

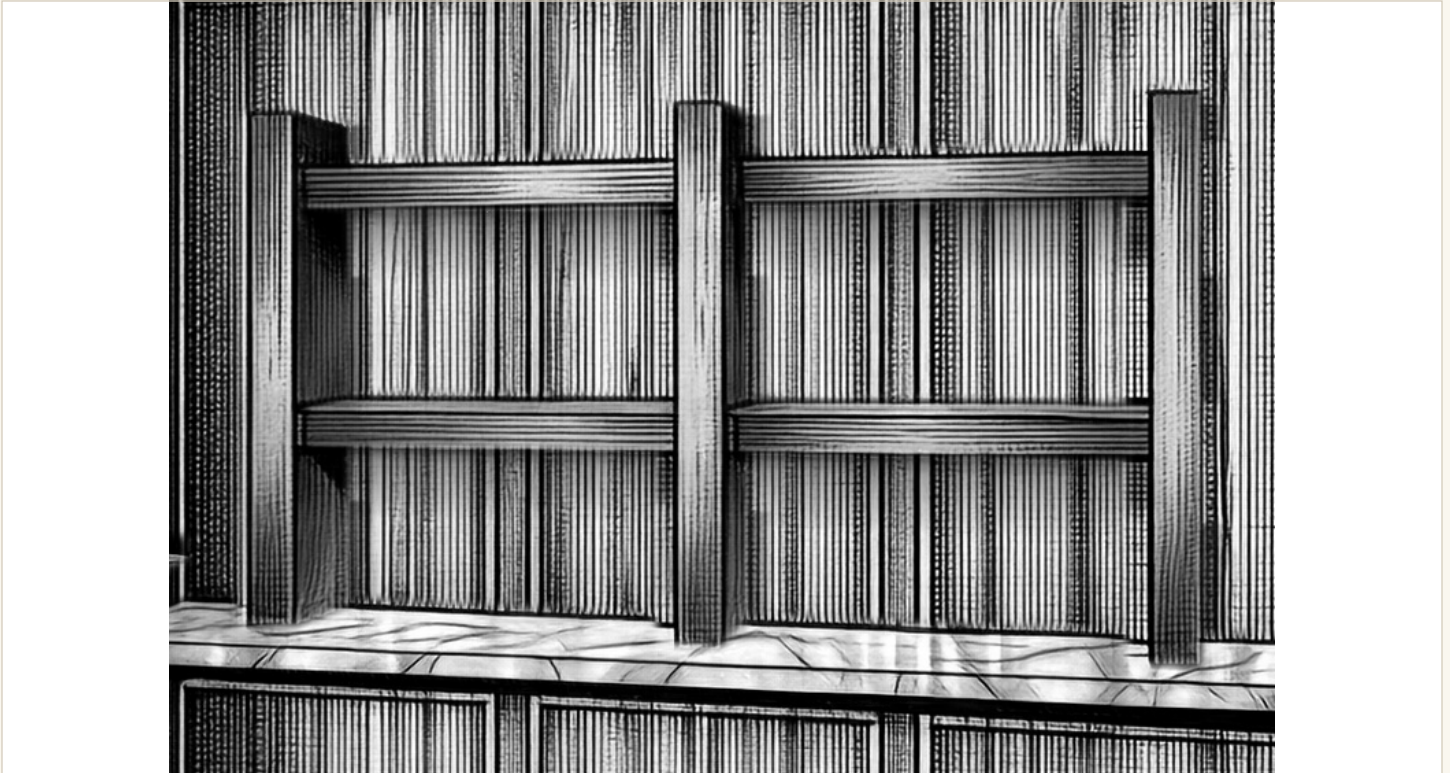

I am still perfecting the scene: checking the proportions, materials, lettering and joins so the whole room feels consistent.

Current background study, recorded at 9:01 p.m. Eastern. This report shows the setting in development.

THE MAIN ADVANCE / OPEN WALNUT SHELVES

The shelves now have a direction.

After exploring several approaches, I chose two thick walnut slabs supported by three posts. The wall stays visible behind them, giving the room a more open feel.

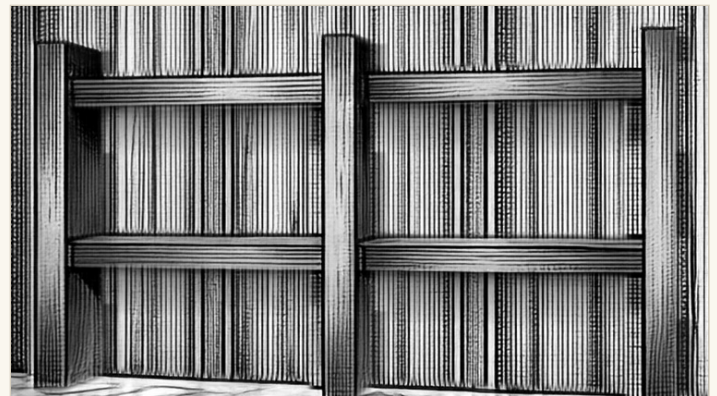

THE CHOSEN DESIGN IN THE ROOM

The cabinet doors beneath the rear ledge have been removed. The shelving and surrounding wall can now be reviewed together.

CONSTRUCTION / THICKNESS AND DEPTH

The same design moves from simple forms to the finished drawing style; the overall scene remains in progress.

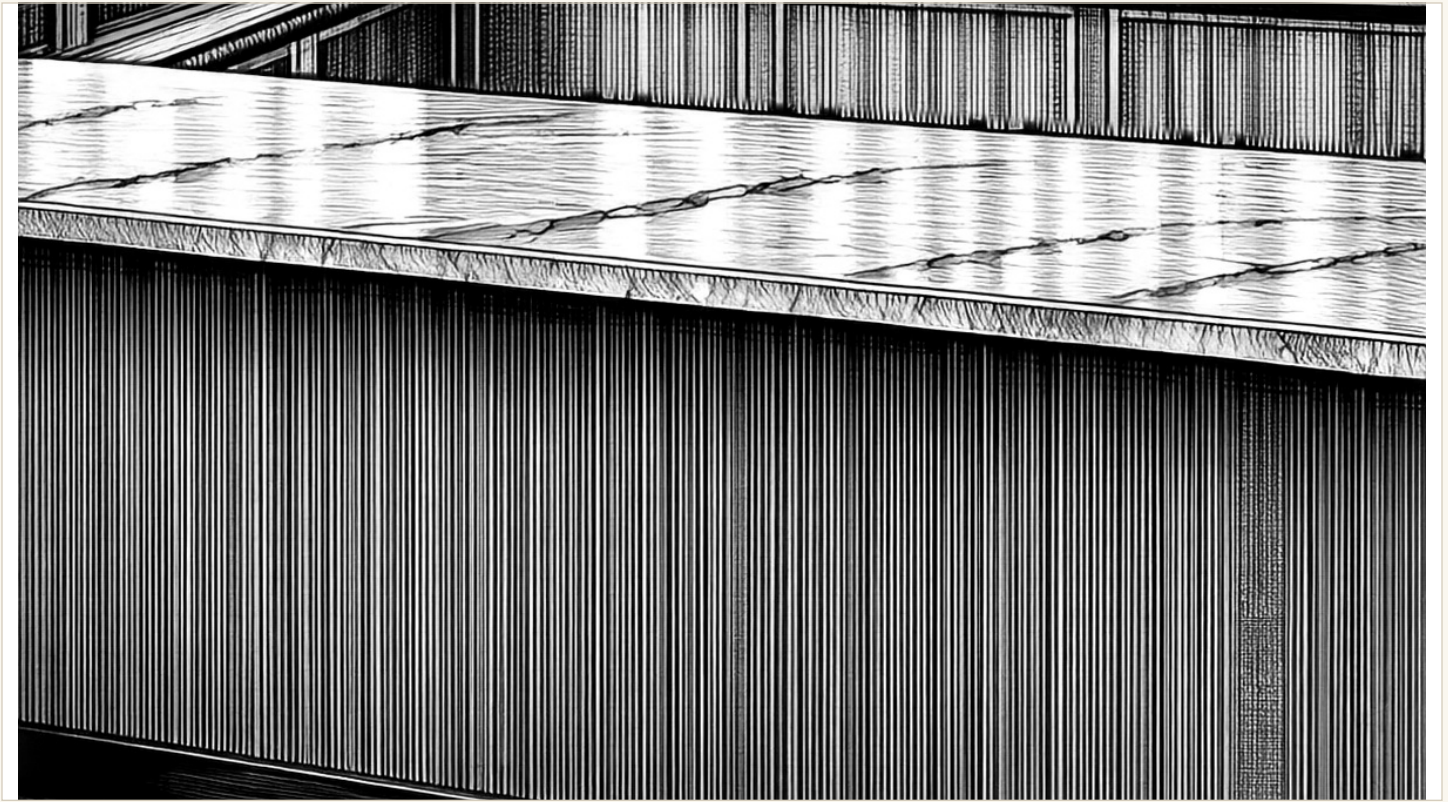

DRAWING / WOOD, EDGES AND SHADOW

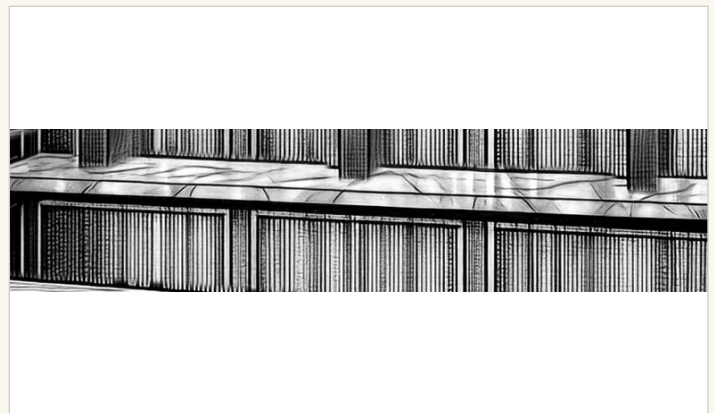

THE BAR / SURFACE AND CONSTRUCTION

Getting the bar itself right.

I worked on the marble top, its edge and the rear ledge as separate pieces, checking each one against the room before bringing the furniture back into the study.

CURRENT BAR STUDY

A cleaner run across the marble, with the top and front edge reading as one continuous surface. I am still refining the material and line work.

EARLIER BAR STUDY / CABINETS LATER REMOVED*REAR LEDGE / CURRENT DETAIL

THE WINDOW / SILL AND SIGNAGE

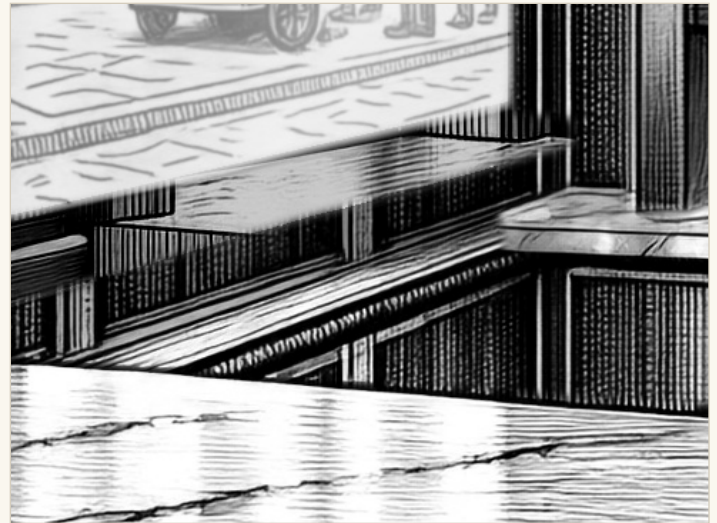

Making the window feel convincing.

The window received a simpler sill design and a new lettering treatment. I am checking the relationship between the stone, the frame, the sign and the street outside.

A MORE READABLE SIGN

I changed the letter style and raised the wording to give it more space above the hot dog cart. The sign reads in reverse from inside the room, as lettering on the outside of glass would.

ONE MARBLE SILL

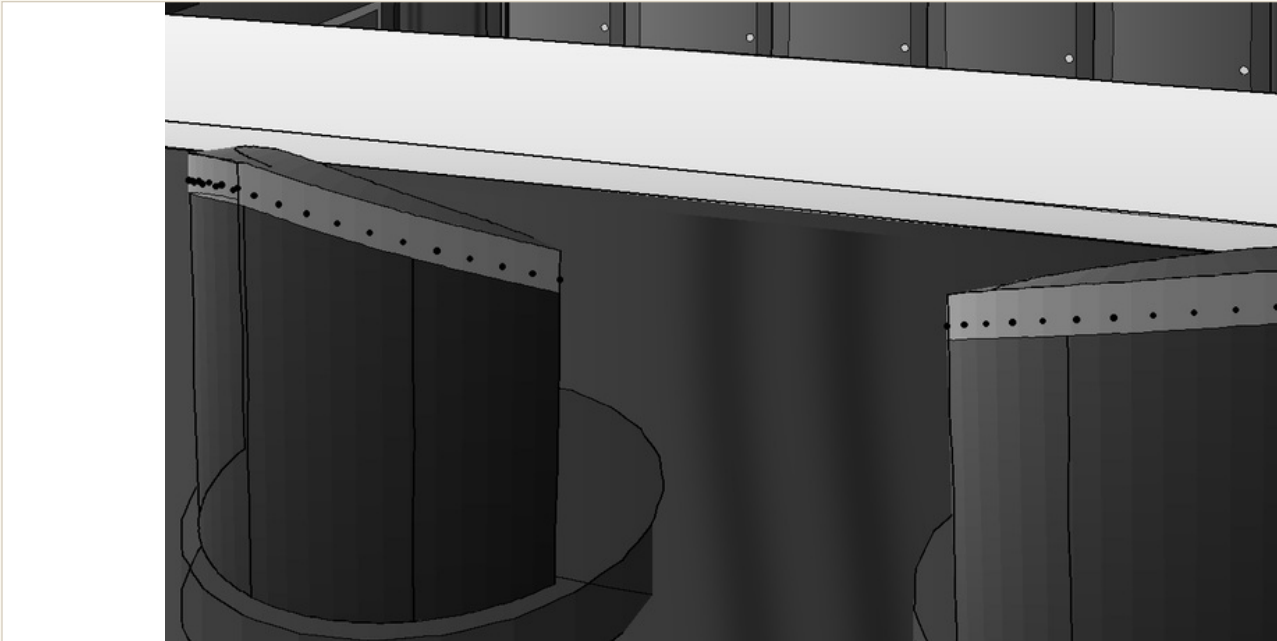

The new design replaces the stack of rails under the window with a projecting stone sill. Its edge, shadow and join to the wall are still being reviewed.

The street view remains part of the atmosphere: city buildings, a hot dog cart and anonymous passersby beyond the glass. The wall lights remain removed.

FURNITURE STUDIES / PROPORTION AND FINISH

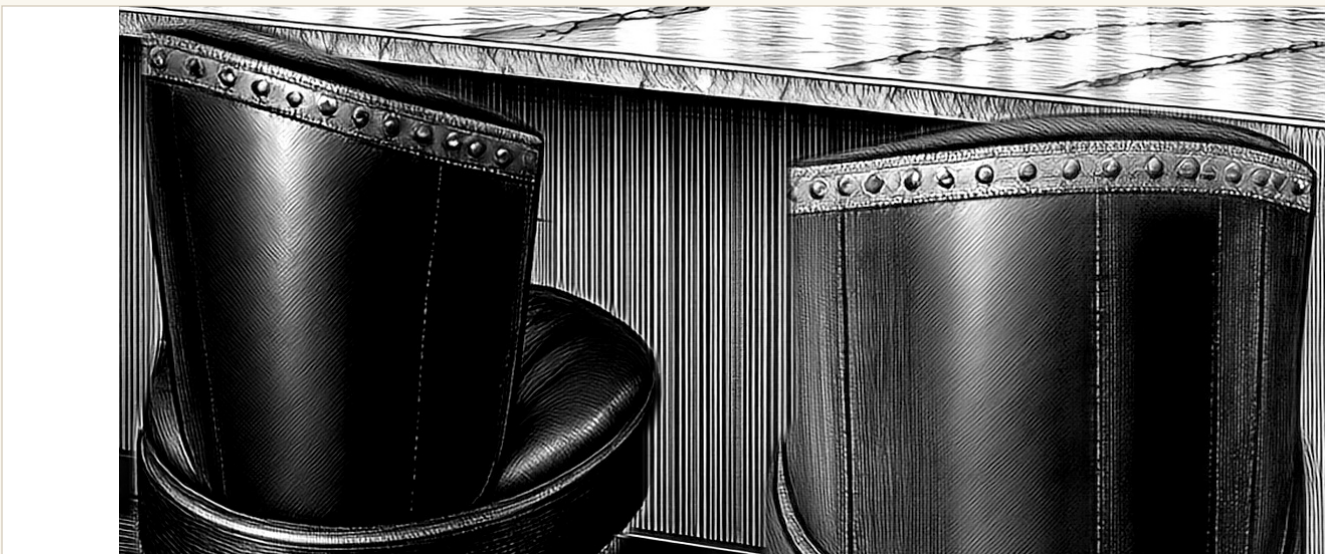

The chairs are still being refined.

I worked through the chair backs, visible seat cushions, leather and trim. These are furniture studies within the setting, with the shapes and finish still under review.

DRAWING STAGE / THE SEAT AND BACK

The construction study makes the seat cushion and back separate, readable forms.

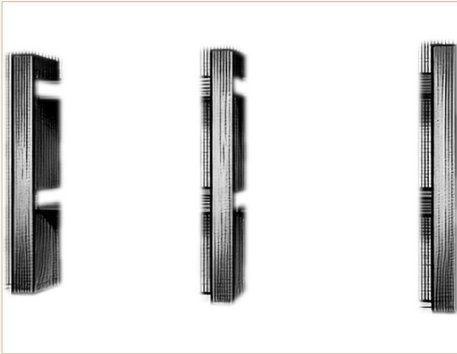

FURNITURE STUDY / LEATHER, TRIM AND SCALE

I am continuing to refine the proportions and how naturally the chairs fit at the bar.

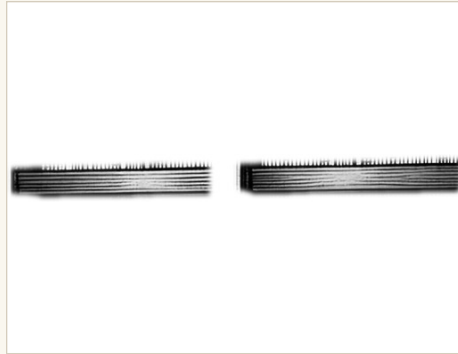

THE MODULAR APPROACH / ORGANIZED PIECES

Each part can be worked on separately.

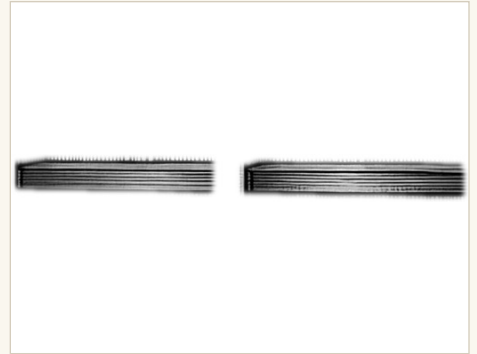

The scene now has a clearer set of named pieces and saved versions. That makes it easier to compare a change, keep the strongest result and continue refining the room.

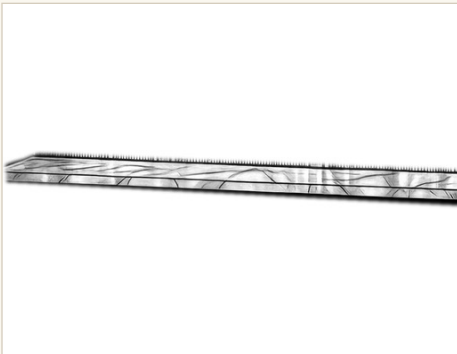

WALNUT POSTS

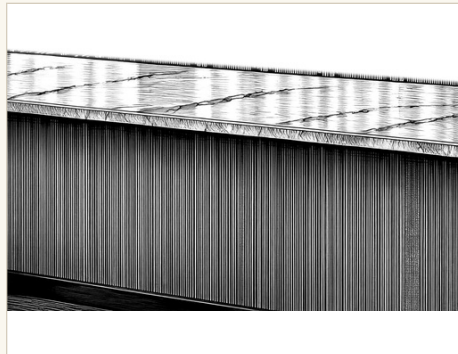

UPPER SHELF

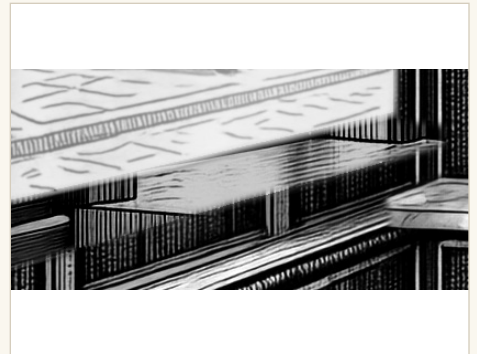

LOWER SHELF

REAR MARBLE LEDGE

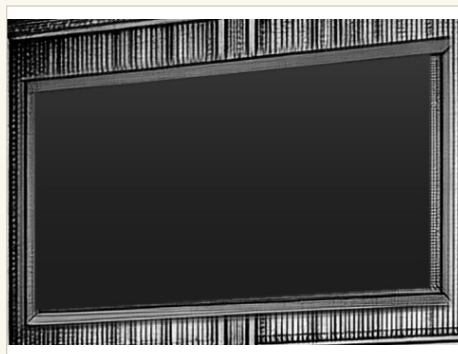

MAIN BAR

WINDOW SILL / IN PLACE

STREET VIEW

TELEVISION / IN PLACE

CHALKBOARD

Seven separate art pieces and two fixtures shown in place. Keeping the parts organized lets me improve one detail at a time.

WHERE THE WORK STANDS / NEXT REFINEMENTS

I am still perfecting the scene.

Today established a stronger direction for the setting. I am continuing to refine how the materials, proportions and smaller details work together.

SHELVES AND WALL

Keep refining the depth, shadows and wood texture so the shelving belongs naturally against the panelling.

WINDOW AND LETTERING

Check the sill, frame and sign together, especially their edges, spacing and relationship to the street view.

BAR AND SEATING

Continue refining the marble, leather and proportions so the room feels coherent at the chosen camera angle.

The goal is a setting that feels convincing down to the small details. I want to keep improving the scene until its construction, atmosphere and drawing style all feel right.